Japanese Language

As shared by Tadao Ando,

“The best way to learn Japanese is to have a look at the Japanese culture and its relationship with nature.”

The Japanese language consists of three letter sets i.e. Hiragana, Kanji and Katakana. The language can be written in two different ways. The first one is the horizontal way, which is also called as the western type and the other one is the vertical way which is also called as the traditional way of writing Japanese. The fact of the matter is that both the styles exist even today.

Attributes of the Japanese Language

Pronunciation

In comparison to the other languages, the Japanese language knows very few pronunciation as well as sounds. Therefore learning the Japanese language is relatively easy as compared to the other languages, in particular for the new learners. However, the Japanese accent is relatively difficult than the other languages but easier than the Chinese language.

Grammar

As compared to the other languages, the Japanese language is fairly easy when it comes to gender articles and distinction between the singular as well as plural. Further, the conjugation rules are relaxed and are not bound to any exceptions of adjectives as well as verbs.

Levels of Speech

There are various levels of expression which differ when one talks to a person elder to you and for the individual who is younger than you in age. Also, the figure of speech varies when you speak to your friend and when you speak to your family members.

Method used for Teaching

The institute makes use of various methods to teach Japanese Language to the students like plays, workshop, audio visual programs etc. to help its student to not only learn the language but imbibe the language such that it becomes an asset for the individual for life long.

Especially for individuals who want to pursue their career in Japanese Language, Iteskul provides a supportive as well as an effective environment for learning.
